How our organization uses Ranorex Studio:

We have a lot of different products and systems and until now they all required manual testing for each and every version, wasting a lot of time. Since our start with Ranorex more than a year ago, a good chunk of these tests are automated. The QA department can now handle much more workload and deliver better results.

Would you recommend Ranorex Studio?

Yes, I would. It's very intuitive and the learning curve is not very steep. Another very important factor is that it's actively maintained and improved every day, increasing even more the ability of creating better tests.
